The Biggest Lie?

Most people are unaware that anti-virus software and traditional consumer identity theft providers CANNOT stop a cybercriminal or hacker...They are mostly effective only AFTER your identity has already been stolen. Every day new, more sophisticated viruses are released online, and most are unable to be identified until it's too late.

What you're NOT being told is that there are now proactive ways to protect yourself from cyber criminals.

More than 40 million Americans have fallen victim to identity theft. Yet, many still don't take their personal cyber security seriously. 40% admit they don't regularly check their credit reports. Worse yet, most still use simple, easy-to-remember passwords (which are also easily hacked).

Unfortunately, people still have a relaxed and often times careless behavior when conducting online banking activities and other sensitive financial business, with no concern about open Wi-Fi networks which are accessible by EVERYONE. Even so-called SSL protected websites are not as safe as you think they are. This is your hard-earned money and reputation we're talking about here!

Most People Think

Most people think that if they have a current identity protection product they are fully protected.

THIS IS A MISCONCEPTION!

Though identity theft protection is a must have product in today's online world and they do assist in partially protecting your assets, for the most part these products are helpful after your private personal information has been compromised. Unfortunately, someone now has your personal information such as your address, social security number, banking information, driver's license and information on your children or spouse.

Yes, they know who you are. These products are not effective in "TOTAL PREVENTION". You need more!

Keystroke Encryption

Works on Desktops, Laptops and Mobile Devices (Apple iOS & Android)

You may not know that every keystroke you type can be captured by vicious keylogging malware and people use it every day to steal your identity. Keystroke Encryption outsmarts cyber criminals by encrypting your keystroke data from the point of origin - your keyboard - and delivering it safely and securely to your browser or desktop. When you type, keyloggers only see a meaningless sequence of numbers.
